If war depended on women there never would be a war. Just how international questions which now result in war would be settled, the masculine mind, which always thinks in terms of force, cannot quite fathom. Wars are begun by mon and are continued by men. They are the war makers. But women are the war sufferers. In war it is always the woman who pays. That seems manifestly unfair to a woman's mind; that she should be asked to suffer for what she has absolutely no hand in making and would provent if she had the pow-

The more wonderful it is, therefore, that women so instinctively rise to the demands of war. And fortunate it is that they do. For while men do the actual fighting, the great truth must not be overlooked that no war could successfully be waged without woman's part in it. We have a large lot of Ladies' Button Boots, Gun Metal and Pahas, and there comes in the heroism, the soldier or the sailor who leaves comes back the answering "wire" or Miss Ethel W. Russell closes her width, which we are selling for $3.00 per pair. These boots were bought on a low market and for that reason we are able to sell them for this price. These same boots on today's market would cost $4.00 of our country. But I notice that of resignation, but in the sense of back to me, without clumsy words, next regular session at the Red Cross or $4.50 and when these are sold we will have to get that price for the same quality, and manufacturers tell us that prices are going still higher. We have about 500 pairs of these boots but they are selling rapidly. It is a good time to buy them now.

Sandy's Method.

McTrigger dropped on his knees in the sand. The look of exultation was some from his face. He twisted the collar about the dog's limp neck until He came to the worn plate, on which he hould make out the faintly engraved letters K-n-z-n-n. He spelled the letters out one by one, and the look in his face was of one who still disbelieved what he had seen and heard.

Sandy was a connolsseur of dogs-of dogs that had worn sledge traces. He bad lived among them two-thirds of his life. He could tell their nge, their value, and a part of their history at a trall of a Mackenzle bound from that of a Malemute, and the track of an Eskimo dog from that of a Yukon Kazan was part wild. He was big and coming winter, and of the high prices that dogs would bring at Red Gold City. He went to the cance and returned with a roll of stout moose-hide bublehe. Then he sat down cross-legged in front of Kazan and began making a muzzle. He did this by platting bablche thougs in the same manner that one does in making a web of a know-shoe. In ten minutes he had the muzzle over Kazan's nose and fastened securely about his neck. To the dog's Sandy followed up the thought with a smashing blow that landed on Kazan's head, and once more the old battler fell limp upon the sand. McTrigger's breath was coming in quick gasps. He was almost winded. Not until the club slipped from his hand did he realize how desperate the fight had been. Before Kazan recovered from the blow that had stunned him Sandy examined the muzzle and strengthened It by adding another babiche thong. Then he dragged Kuzan to a log that high water had thrown up on the shore a few yards away and made the end of the babiche rope fast to a dead mag. After that he pulled his canoc higher up on the sand, and began to prepare camp for the night.

Each time he brought Kazan with it, and the dog sparled and cardi" suspped savagely at the end of it. That was what Sandy wanted-it was an old trick of the dog-slaver. Instantly he was using the club again, until with a whining cry Kazan slunk under the protection of the sung to which he was fastened. He could scarcely drug himself. Ills right forepaw was smashed. Ills blad-quarters sank under him. For a time after this second benting he could not have escaped flad he been free.

Sandy was in unusually good humor, "I'll take the devil out of you all right." he told Kazan for the twentieth Umc. "There's nothin' like beatin's to make dogs an' wimmin live up to the mark. mosity. But there was no longer any desire left in Kazan to fight. Illa two terrific beatings, and the crushing blow of the bullet against his skull, had made him sick. He lay with his head between his forepaws, his eyes closed, and did not see McTrigger. He paid no attention to the meat that was thrown under his nose. He did not know when the last of the sun sank behind the western forests, or when the darkness came. But at last something roused him from his stuper. To his dazed and sickened brain it came like a call from out of the far past, and he raised his head and listened. In few moments Kazan stood with his forefeet planted in the damp sand at the edge of the stream. For a brief interval Sandy allowed the babiche to fall slack. Then with a sudden powerful pull he jerked Kazan out into the water. Instantly he sent the cance into midstream, swung it quickly down with the current, and began to paddle enough to keep the babiche taut about his victim's neck. In spite of his sickness and injuries Kazan was now compelled to swim to keep his head above water. In the wash of the cance, and with Sandy's strokes growing stendily stronger, his position became each moment one of increasing torture. At times his shaggy head was pulled completely under water. At others Sandy would walt until he had drifted alongside, and then thrust him under with the end of his paddle. He grew weaker. At the end of a half mile he was drowning. Not until then did Sandy pull him alongside and drag him into the canoe. The dog fell limp and gasping in the bottom. Brutal though Sandy's methods had been, they had worked his purpose. In Kazan there was no longer a desire to fight. He no longer struggled for freedom. He knew or two of his nose, and what he smelled was his own blood. For five days and five nights the fourney down-stream continued, and McTrigger's process of civilizing Kazan was continued in three more beatings with the club, and another resort to the water torture. On the morning of the sixth day they reached Red Gold City, and McTrigger put up his tent close to the river. THE COMMON SQUASH BUG.

Life History, Habits, and Methods of Control.

According to sibe lotters sent the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station the common squash bug (Annan tristis) does annually a good deal of damage within the State.

Injury may begin soon after the the plants have made some considerable growth, and may continue until their death or the departure of the by the hibernated bugs. Soon after their first appearance, which varies according to temperature and locality from wrly spring in the South to late In June farther north, the insects copulate and begin the deposition of their copy, to eggs, attaching them by an adhesive secretion to the leaves in masses of three or four to forty or more. The eggs are metallic brown or bronze in color and flattened on three sides. They are laid usually on the under side of a leaf, but not infrequently also on the unpay side: often is regular rows. the upper side; often in regular rows, but sometimes less regularly; and either separated or more closely crowded together as in the anfaller mass. They are whilish when Arst laid, but soon change to bronze, and batch in from eight to thirteen days fato small green and black creatures, which resemble for in having proportionately longer escape from the eggshell through a little round hole cut out of one end. In this period of its existence which is known as the first nymph stage, the insects live in colonies, at first remainlag close together upon the leaf near where the eggs, were laid, but later congregating about the bases of the leafstalks or biding, together with individuals of the more advanced stages and the parent insect, under nearby clods of rubbish, or in any convenient retreat, and coming forth toward dusk in sourch of food. The nymphs cast their skins five times before reaching the mature condition, increasing their growth after each molt. Three days after hatching, the nymph having attained a larger size molts and assumes the second stage. In this stage it lives eight or nine days before undergoing the next molt. The third stage requires seven to eight, and the fourth six days. The afth stage is passed in eight day when the Alth and Anal molt takes place and the insect appears as a fullwired lug. In its last stage the insect continues to feed, but with the disappearance of its food supply, caused by the dying or clearing away of the crop on which it has fed, it seeks shelter in any convenient rubbish, under boards or stones, old vines of similar vegetation, or under the loose bark on dead trees, or in eracks of barns or outhousor, and here passes the winter. Hibernation in the District of Columbia. where the periods above mentioned have been observed by the writer, begias some time in September, Methods of Control.

This insect is usually resistant to an exceptional degree to investiglides, and this is particularly true of the adults. A wash strong enough to kill the mature insect will at the same time dostroy the vines. This renders it neces attended to. sary to proceed against it by hand and by cultural methods.

Hand picking early in the season.-A look-out for the bugs should be kept early in the season, and those as well as the eggs should be picked off or out away with shears and destroyed. The clusters while the vines are young, are readily seen, and the grower should make a practice at the beginning of each sesson of going over the vines every few days. Buch young as may hatch in spite of these procautions may be killed by keresene emulsion applied upon their first appearance.

Trapplag the bugs.-The bugs may also be trapped by placing on the greend at intervals through the garden, boards, shingled, pieces of bark, or similar material, to which the bugs will be attracted for shelter. Here they should be looked for and destroyed avery meralag or sa during the sesson.

Protection to ensurblis other than squash, and perhaps pumpkla, can be secured by growing these plants with the others to serve as trap crops. At- ago. tack will thus be centered upon a few plants where the inscels can be the her patents in Magalleway, Baturday more readily controlled.

GREAT SUCCESS OF LIB-ERTY LOAN IN BETHEL

$100,200 Subscribed Through Bethel National Bank

Final figures show a total of $100, 200 through Bethel National Bank This is far above the quota and Bethel people should foul proud as should all the people in the vicinity and nearby towns who have helped swell the amount to those large figures. For our comparatively small town, this fa an exceptionally good showing and much credit is due to those who have so generously subscribed and taken so ranch pride in bringing the amount to this sum of more than $100,000 as some did in the dual hours of the campaign, Besides this sun, there has been quite a sum taken by our people undoubted ly which is not included in the above. Bethel has cortainly been put on the map by this most patriotic response to our country's call.
